To-MORROW the United Labor Party This is Henry George's ontfit, and the indications are that it may not prove to be very united. Mr. George has read the Socialists out of his camp, and from some parts of the State Socialists have been elected as delegates. They will be on hand to take their seats.

When one of their leaders was aske what would be the result if they were no admitted, he said: "So much the worse for the United Labor Party. What is i without us?" He said further that George's land theories are a delusion, and his free trade notion the worst sort of fallacy. A representative of the United Labor Party, which held its convention at Rochester last week, denies that his organization is in the interest of Governor Hill, and declares that Hill has his hands on the throat of the Henry George party

It appears, therefore, that the labo forces will not act as one man in New York this year, but that the men who compose them will do a good deal of free hand votpoliticians who have been casting up their own percentage of gain from the handling of the labor vote in bulk. It will be very difficult to deliver to any syndicate formed

The affair, he states, was witnessed by a couple of fishermen, who were off the shore in a boat. After seeing the result of her shots the cruiser put to sea. There was no storm, so the noise heard on shore could not have been caused by thunder. The reports were heard by nearly every-body in the village. The gentleman says every effort is being made to keep it quiet. The object of the authorities in suppressing the news can readily be understood; but, if true, the facts must come out, as it would hardly be possible to keep every man on board the cruiser from telling something of the story as soon as he reached a port. The number of lives lost would probably be from twelve to fifteen. That the report did not come from Bactouche sooner is explained by the fact that it is an isolated place. bat it is an isolated place.
